rehearsal material

jeté or ricochet, a fast bouncing of the bow against the string, getting faster as the bouncing gets quieter. In this example, the left hand makes a glissando from A down towards the open string, while the bow bounces.

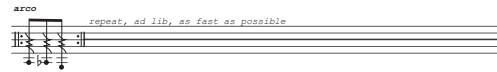

unmeasured tremolo, as fast as possible.

accidentals are not carried through to other notes.

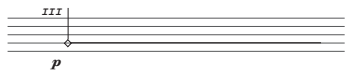

In this example the notes are: A Ab G, A Ab G, G G# A, G G# A repeat the sequence between the repeat marks, as fast as possible for the duration of the line that follows.

glissando on the IV string, followed by a jeté a natural harmonic, with the finger at the position indicated by the diamond notehead, and the string indicated by the roman numeral. In this example, the sounding note will be a D, two octaves above the open III string.

an artificial harmonic, the first finger presses the note at the filled notehead, and the fourth finger presses lightly at the note with the diamond notehead. The resulting pitch here will be a B natural two octaves above the stopped note.

the most difficult phrase in the piece:
starts at beat 289

note: the first pizz pitches (here Bb) are different in each part
